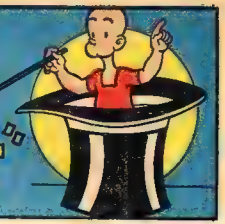
HENRY GOES HIGH HAT



Henry noticed the crowd in front of the Music Shoppe. Never one to pass up a show, he joined the throng to see what he could see! As a matter of fact, he couldn't see anything but the back of a portly gentleman, who kept muttering: "Wonderful! I don't see how he does it."

Getting down on all fours, Henry crept through the maze of legs and feet, and finally stood upright before the entire group.

NO WONDER THE ONLOOKERS WERE GASPING IN ADMIRATION AND AMAZEMENT! A large television set was in the middle of the window, and in the center of the screen, a clever MAGICIAN was in action!

The modern Merlin, doing his stuff on the screen, was impressive in a cutaway coat and white gloves. At the moment, he was tapping a shiny, high silk hat with a wand. A beautiful white dove flew up out of the hat, and out of the picture. Then, came the usual rabbit, followed by baby chicks and lastly, an egg. Henry, in a good spot to see and hear everything that happened, caught these magic words everytime the performer tapped the hat: "FLIBBETY JIBBITS."

The hat routine concluded the program, and 'midst loud applause, the magician vanished from the screen in a puff of smoke! The announcer said the next television feature would be a SPELLING BEE, so naturally, Henry and all the other youngsters in the crowd eased their way out to more pleasant surroundings.

Blimp Jones joined Henry as the two strolled up the street.

"Great show, eh Henry," enthused Blimp. "Gosh, when we get our television set, I hope my mom tunes in some of those cooking shows. They teach you how to make wonderful pies and cakes."

"Yep," answered Henry, dreamily. "Can you imagine Henrietta smiling out from one of those screens?"

"CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS!" exclaimed Blimp, stopping in his tracks, "I ALMOST FORGOT TO TELL YOU!"

"Tell me WHAT?" demanded Henry.

"When you mentioned Henrietta, it reminded me that she wants all the gang to meet at her house this afternoon, at four o'clock. Her mother's going to serve milk and cookies as a sort of farewell party. They're going on their vacation tomorrow!"

"Fine thing," stormed Henry, his hands on his hips, "I might have gone fishing and missed the whole thing."

"And that's not all," continued the Jones boy, "Everyone is supposed to do a little act. Henrietta's going to award a PRIZE for the MOST ENTERTAINING STUNT."

"Blimp, I ought to punch you right in the nose," threatened Henry. "Here it is nearly three o'clock! How can I have a good act worked up by four?"

"That's the general idea, pal," laughed Blimp, over his shoulder, as he ran in the direction of his house. "WE KNEW THAT YOU'D FIGURE OUT A WAY TO WIN THAT PRIZE, BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO BE GOOD TO BEAT US. WE'VE BEEN REHEARSING OUR ACTS SINCE YESTERDAY!"

Henry didn't want to show up at the party with a black eye, or he would have chased Blimp and shown him a good trick with his fist.

"CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS!" exclaimed Blimp, stopping in his tracks, "I ALMOST FORGOT TO TELL YOU!"

"Tell me WHAT?" demanded Henry.

"When you mentioned Henrietta, it reminded me that she wants all the gang to meet at her house this afternoon, at four o'clock. Her mother's going to serve milk and cookies as a sort of farewell party. They're going on their vacation tomorrow!"

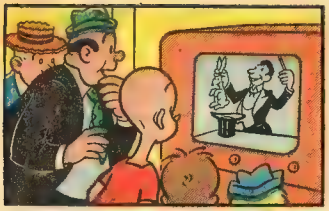
"Fine thing," stormed Henry, his hands on his hips, "I might have gone fishing and missed the whole thing."

"And that's not all," continued the Jones boy, "Everyone is supposed to do a little act. Henrietta's going to award a PRIZE for the MOST ENTERTAINING STUNT."

"Blimp, I ought to punch you right in the nose," threatened Henry. "Here it is nearly three o'clock! How can I have a good act worked up by four?"

"That's the general idea, pal," laughed Blimp, over his shoulder, as he ran in the direction of his house. "WE KNEW THAT YOU'D FIGURE OUT A WAY TO WIN THAT PRIZE, BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO BE GOOD TO BEAT US. WE'VE BEEN REHEARSING OUR ACTS SINCE YESTERDAY!"

Henry didn't want to show up at the party with a black eye, or he would have chased Blimp and shown him a good trick with his fist.



His anger turned slowly to despair when he thought how silly he'd look in Henrietta's eyes, when all the other guests would perform and HE'D have to say he wasn't prepared!

He thought: "If only I were a magician, like that fellow on the television show. Golly, SHE'D love an act like that . . . ."

Just then, Henry looked up. He was passing the Elm Street Theatre, and there, smiling down from a gay billboard, was a picture of the great "WHITESTONE, MAGICIAN EXTRAORDINARY"! Henry read that Whitestone was concluding his engagement that evening.

"Jeepers!" He snapped his fingers. "He might lend it to me, at that. I can't lose a thing by asking!"

Henry ran around to the theatre stage door, and dashed inside, where he was stopped by Pop Billings.

"Pop, do me a favor, and let me visit Whitestone backstage, please, Pop. It's a matter of life and death, Pop, and besides, I want to borrow his magic top hat."

"Sorry, son," said Pop calmly, between puffs of his pipe, "but Whitestone won't be here until half past seven this evening . . . ."

Henry's shoulders drooped, as he walked slowly toward the door . . . "HOWEVER, YOU'LL FIND ONE OF WHITESTONE'S OLD TOP HATS IN THE RUBBISH CAN, RIGHT OUTSIDE IN THE ALLEY, HENRY, IF THAT WILL HELP . . . ."

Henry was so excited he forgot to thank the kindly old man, and shooshed out the door and up the tiny alley. There on top of the heap was the high, silk hat. It was a bit battered, but surely possessed of all its magic power!

He had just time enough to bathe and arrive at Henrietta's by four o'clock. The other youngsters were all there, and Blimp grinned smugly from his perch on the Ottoman.

Julius sang a song. Blimp drew pictures on a blackboard. Eloise danced a twosome with Herman, while Shorty stood on his head. The Carroll twins told jokes, after Butch did a funny recitation. THEN, IT WAS HENRY'S TURN! The boys were all smirking now, as he used an old drumstick for a wand, tapped the high hat, and said: "FLIBBETY JIBBITS."

BUT NOTHING CAME OUT OF THE HAT!

Red-faced, and perspiring, Henry tried it again, speaking slowly and distinctly: "FLIBBETY JIBBETS."

Then, in sheer desperation, he put his hand into the dark hat.

HE PULLED IT OUT AGAIN QUICKLY, WITH A YELL!

There were no doves, rabbits, chicks, or eggs in that topper, but something was in it that could SCRATCH!

Turning the hat over on the table, while the guests crowded around jabbering, Henry, to his astonishment, watched a gorgeous inky-black kitten crawl out with a charming "Mew."

Henrietta led the girls in clapping with delight, and they agreed that Henry's was the most surprising and NOVEL act!

Henry was presented with a MAGIC SET; Henrietta adopted the cuddly kitten for her very own "going away gift", and the boys could do nothing but stare glumly in wonder.

TRUTHFULLY, HENRY WAS A BIT BEWILDERED BY HIS OWN MAGIC, TOO!
